

IMPLANTING CARBON TO FORM P-TYPE
SOURCE DRAIN EXTENSIONS

Abstract of the Disclosure

The use of a carbon implant, in addition to the 5 conventional fluorine implant, may significantly reduce the transient enhanced diffusion in P-type source drain extension regions. As a result, resistivity may be reduced, and dopant density may be increased, increasing current drive in some embodiments.